

Scooby, Fox Squirrel: Scooby was brought to the Wildlife Center in January of 2003. She was raised by humans and became imprinted. Since she is imprinted, identifies with humans for food, companionship, and reproduction, she cannot be released.

DID YOU KNOW:

- The Center treats about 1,600 animals every year
- Each year, the number of animals admitted rises
- 90% of the animals we treat are injured due to man's impact on nature
- Birds are 80% of our caseload.
- The most common and most preventable injury we treat is a cat attack.
- We admit at least two Endangered Species each year.
- Most "nuisance" problems can be solved humanely.

Our Mission

The ARL Wildlife Center is a clinic for the rehabilitation of injured and orphaned wildlife. The Educational Programs provided to regional residents help to foster an appreciation for conservation and a harmonious existence between individuals and wildlife.

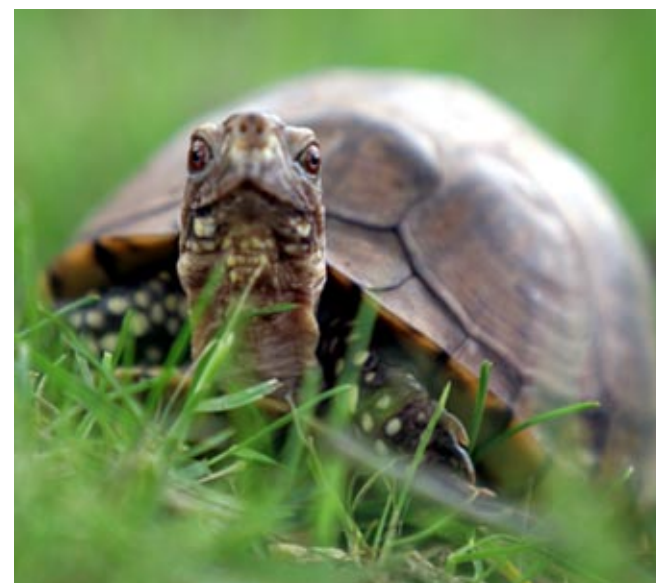

Jeeves, Black Rat Snake: Jeeves was admitted to the Center in July 2004 with an eye abscess and numerous wounds. It's assumed that he was attacked by crows. He's still undergoing treatment for his eye, but has his vision. Because of his injuries, he cannot be released.

Martha, Great Horned Owl: Martha came to the Center in June 2005. She was admitted with a fractured humerus on the right side. Because the injury was already at least a week old, it healed improperly. Martha is not able to fly, so she cannot be released.

Who We Are: The ARL Wildlife Center is a fully licensed nonprofit rehabilitation center in operation since 1997. Encroaching development in our region is reducing our native wildlife's viable habitat. Every expansion causes the number of animals who are displaced, injured and orphaned to increase. Our mission is to return healthy animals to the wild, because we believe that every life counts. The ARLWC is funded entirely by private donations.
